A sideboard for the centre of the room.

Air is a small family of furniture for storage purposes that combines a graphic pattern of white ribs with natural cane inlays, giving a feeling of lightness and transparency to items of furniture that often seem heavy and difficult to place in the room. Air can be used as freestanding room dividers or placed against a wall.

Woven cane gives a visible surface, but also provides a sense of depth. One can guess at what is hiding in the cupboard without this being irksome. The woven cane ventilates the cupboard which is practical when storing both clothes and electronic devices. With his mix of Swedish and French roots Mathieu was tempted to pair the Swedish attitude to furniture with that of the French.

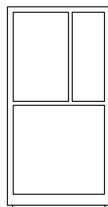

“My Swedish relatives furnished their homes in typical Swedish style; pared down and practical. People in France are not as uniform”, he maintains. “They can readily mix Empire with Ikea.”

Air is given a unique personality through the mixture of a refined, blond and airy Scandinavian idiom with a touch of French style and elegance as well as the use of cane, which one would hardly expect in such an item of furniture.
