

Please note that the appearance of antique brass colours can vary based on the light conditions under which the product is viewed. For example, if an antique brass product is viewed outdoors it may appear to have a green tinge. However, if the same product is viewed indoors under a warm white light it may appear to have more of a red hue (as depicted in the product photography on our below. This is due to the properties within the patina which reflect warm light and white light differently. This results in varying appearances in different environments.

The photography on our website features our antique brass finishes under warm white light as this will be their most likely installed environment.

Please see below examples of acceptable variations in colour for antiqued products.
